Women Revolution: Reflection

Women have been unable to play important roles in our society their entire lives. They have been restricted to do house work, get married, take care of their husbands, have kids, and take care of their kids. They were not given a choice, but were forced to do and say what “was right”. This is when women started to rebel and speak up for themselves. It wasn't what they did that got them noticed, but how they chose to do it. Small movements began to happen. Because of those movements, women have an international day just dedicated to them and their rights. Birth control and birth control clinics were created for those women whom didn't wish to be perfect wives and have a lot of children, and chose themselves and self care. Rosa Parks, not only a woman, but a black woman, decides to state her rights by not giving up her seat to a white male. She didn't only struggle with being a woman but she was also struggling with racial discrimination as well.

Because of these movements, work laws were placed in favor of all women, black or white. Laws were also placed to look after women protection against domestic and sexual assault. These and many other movements have made it to show the real value of human rights. Women's rights are not just women's rights, they are human rights. It is also because of it that Hillary Clinton became the first woman to be nominated for presidency, and Kamala Harris became the first woman Vice President of the United States. Big and little movements led to big historical events that empower women and stand by women's rights today.
